

I'm not robot!

The end of spring and the beginning of summer is where the nightmare begins for most students. Burning the midnight oil, as they say, as we sit and cram a whole semester's worth of topics into 2 days. Tensions run high as we sit in groups in the library trying to catch up with everyone else. As we lean upon one another to help and grow together, the cooperation that was absent throughout the semester happens overnight. This is the time where everyone becomes allies; this is the time of final exams. However, during this time is when many fail to realize that being calm and collective is the key to concentration and successfully getting through finals. Here are a few pointers that might help you get through your finals and move on to an amazing summer. 1. Choose An Appropriate Study Time. Our bodies are unique. Therefore, our biological clocks are programmed differently too. That means that adapting your routine to everyone else's can bring you more harm than good. As your body suffers from trying to force itself to absorb all the information, you'll eventually tire yourself out and the whole session won't be as productive. - Scroll down to continue reading article - - Scroll down to continue reading article - Alternatively, it would be best if you create your own study time. Observe yourself at the times you're highly productive and align your study periods then. This will increase your efficiency and you'll be able to carry on the same energy flow for a longer period. This methodology also increases your ability to concentrate, hence you needn't worry about forgetting what you've learned. 2. Keep Sweets Of Different Colors And Flavors With You. Sweets are one of the world's great gifts. As the delicious, sugary goodness oozes down your throat, you realize what a good day feels like. Also, you may not have known that munching on sweets while studying allows you to increase your attention span. This gives you the ammunition to concentrate longer and remember better. There's also something called "association memory," where your memory associates what you taste, smell, or feel with a particular memory. Keeping this in mind, munching on something sweet with either varied colors or tastes will allow you to associate that particular subject with the sweet. Then, during the exams, your subconscious memory will trigger the knowledge needed for you to ace that paper — just don't forget to take the sweets with you to your exam! - Scroll down to continue reading article - - Scroll down to continue reading article - After being trapped in a study room for days, a breath of fresh air can be bliss to the soul. Picture studying as keeping our mind in a library with constructed concrete information where creativity is on hold. Our mind keeps running on the treadmill of information and it eventually tires itself. This is exactly when you start losing your concentration and focus on whatever it is that you're doing. Huge companies such as Google have created various spaces for activities that allow your mind to breathe again, as a way of inducing a more efficient workforce. Why don't you create your own time for leisure too? It could be binge reading your favorite novels, catching up on your favourite series, or making a good meal to treat yourself — just do something to get your mind off studying for a short period of time. 4. Have A Hot Flask Next To You. Have you noticed that in most Hollywood movies, you find a group of students sitting in a corner studying while sipping on a mug of coffee or a huge pot of tea? There's an interesting reason for this. Studies have shown that taking the time to slow down while studying allows your brain to digest information better compared to the normal robotic munching of information. - Scroll down to continue reading article - - Scroll down to continue reading article - Keep a hot flask with you and take a sip of your favorite beverage while studying. Even though you're down to the wire, rushing the process doesn't quite help — even if you've completed all the chapters. Instead, enjoy your beverage while going through the process of learning — what could be better than making learning a fun and relaxing activity? 5. Have A Great Playlist. They say always save the best for last, and the one recommendation which every student knows is to have a great playlist of songs which tender the mood. Music is related to associated memory and it can also calm your now-speeding mind. This gives you the centered emotion you need to overcome each chapter of your studies. Have a playlist of calm studying music — there are many on YouTube and Spotify — and listen to it while you're studying. It can help you lose track of time and forget just how long you've been hitting the books. In other words, music helps in tricking your mind to work more. - Scroll down to continue reading article - - Scroll down to continue reading article - If you have a great playlist set before flipping through your books, studying will seem a lot less like work. Even though finals is a time when as students we feel suffocated, using various adapting mechanisms can make this period a breeze. After all, this process is part of enjoying life as a student and the evolution of you as a person. As they say, first come finals, then comes summer.
